

At the start of the war, clone trooper captains were recognized by the red markings on their helmets and torso armor, but as the war progressed, clone trooper armor became more customized and red marking not longer signified the rank of captain. Clone trooper captains were assigned to lead companies of 144 regular clone troopers.

They were equipped with a DC-15A blaster rifle and a line of thermal detonators. Trained in both squad- and company-level tactics, as well as to handle the 74-Z speeder bike, clone trooper captains were diverse leaders.

ETA: Q2 2012

Star Wars: Clone
Captain (Red)
GIST-100016
$89.99

FIGURES SOLD
SEPARATELY

Identical in form, physical prowess, stamina and mental capacity, each of the first generations of clone troopers were fully encased in hard white armor, each identical face concealed behind a t-shaped visor.

Color-coded flashes on the armor denoted rank and eventually came to signify individual units, who often became more customized with mission specific gear and armor modifications. Units such as the Galactic Marines, the Shock Troopers, the Siege Battalion and the Star Corps had distinct armor variations that made them stand out.

ETA: Q2 2012

Star Wars:
442nd Siege
Battalion
Clone Trooper
GIST-100023
$89.99